

[Read free] CONFESSIONS OF A CORPORATE SHAMAN: Healing the Organizational Soul

CONFESSIONS OF A CORPORATE SHAMAN: Healing the Organizational Soul

Harrison Snow

*ePub | *DOC | audiobook | ebooks | Download PDF*

DOWNLOAD

READ ONLINE

#631536 in eBooks 2016-10-01 2016-10-01 File Name: B01MDQLXJW | File size: 41.Mb

Harrison Snow : CONFESSIONS OF A CORPORATE SHAMAN: Healing the Organizational Soul before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised CONFESSIONS OF A CORPORATE SHAMAN: Healing the Organizational Soul:

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Expanding Systemic Success By Francesca Mason Boring Confessions of a Corporate Shaman: Healing the Organizational Soul, by Harrison Snow is essential reading for those wishing to face the world of work and management with an effective approach. Introducing the tool of systems constellation in an accessible way, this introduction to a broader perspective will support those who wish to take their management approach out of the dark ages. Case studies, encouragement, exercises for teams, facilitators, coaches, and administrators make this book a must read. In addition to having direct application to organizational consultation, this book has the capacity to accompany one in the area of personal growth. Harrison's decades of international corporate consultation and experience as a facilitator of systems constellation serve both the book and the reader. Great read!

Francesca Mason Boring, Facilitator, Author: Family Systems Constellations and Other Systems Constellation Adventures, A transformational journey

2 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Powerful and important message

By Betsy Hostetler, Ph.D. This book is beautifully written and has a powerful message. Harrison invites us in to the inner circle of a special kind of wisdom, one that all of us who care about doing our best should know.

Betsy Hostetler, Ph.D. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. This book is terrific.

By trip This book is terrific. First, Snow is an unusually clear and powerful writer. His style is intimate and friendly, his thinking systematic and sensible, his ideas and insights right on and usable. Second, although I am a therapist, not a constellation facilitator or coach, I found the examples of his work both moving and entirely creditable. Most important, I really trust him as a writer and healer of people, groups, and businesses. Clearly, he knows what he is talking about, and I sense a deep respect for both the people he has worked with as well as his readers. He is doing the incredibly important work of bringing soul to the marketplace and to groups. Snow, as does the shaman, sees not just what is happening, but what is trying to emerge. I love this book.

Compared to technology, management practices have not really changed much over time. The typewriter and mimeograph machine are artifacts from a lost civilization. Ironically, the way we solve problems, make decisions and resolve issues are also artifacts from that past. The grooves in our brains keep us from embracing new ways of perceiving and understanding. Complexity becomes overwhelming when we limit our mental bandwidth this way. Confessions of a Corporate Shaman is about expanding our personal bandwidth. There is a field of greater intelligence available to us. If we embody the parts of a problem and arrange them as a system we can tap into that intelligence and benefit from what we learn. A big problem quickly shrinks. Opaque complexity gains clarity and simplicity. This visual process, powered by the nearly limitless power of the subconscious mind, generates transformative insights and new possibilities. The shaman in some traditions is "the one who sees." Everyone has this innate capacity. The invitation between these covers is to embark on your personal hero's journey. Whether your challenge is about leading others, leading yourself or trying to understand and resolve the obstacles to organizational change the place to start is within yourself. The compass that will guide you is to be the change you want to see in others. As you explore the inner dynamics that shape your world hopefully you will feel inspired to embrace those dynamics as an essential part of your mission and leadership path.